

Post-migration ethnicity

De-essentializing cohesion, commitments and comparison

Sondersammelgebiet Volks- & Völkerkunde
in Zusammenarbeit mit der DFG

edited by Gerd Baumann
and Thijl Sunier

Contents

Introduction

De-essentializing ethnicity	1
Gerd Baumann and Thijs Sunier

I Cohesion: not given but re-conceived

1 In search of ethnic visibility: Iraqi Assyrian Christians in London	10
Madawi Al-Rasheed
2 The changing role of gossip: towards a new identity? Turkish girls in the Netherlands	36
Marlene de Vries

II Commitments: not collective but cross-cutting

3 Disconnecting religion and ethnicity: Young Turkish Muslims in the Netherlands	58
Thijs Sunier
4 The predicament of mixing 'culture' and 'religion': Turkish and Muslim commitments in post-migration Germany	78
Lale Yalçın-Heckmann
5 Convergence and encompassment: Two dynamics of syncretization in a multi-ethnic part of London	99
Gerd Baumann

III Comparison: not ethnic cultures but collective contingencies

- 6 A historical approach to ethnic differences in social mobility:
Creoles and Hindustanis in Surinam 118
Mies van Niekerk
- 7 Ethnic myth or ethnic might?
On the divergence in educational attainment between Portuguese and Turkish youth in the Netherlands 144
Flip Lindo
- 8 Greek-African interrelations in Eritrea and Greece:
Social interaction as a framework for understanding the construction of ethnic identities 165
Marina Petronoti
- Notes on contributors 185