

Science and society in southern Africa

edited by Saul Dubow

MANCHESTER UNIVERSITY PRESS
Manchester and New York

CONTENTS

General editor's introduction — page vi

Acknowledgements — viii

Notes on contributors — ix

Introduction	Saul Dubow	page 1
1	Field sciences in scientific fields: entomology, botany and the early ethnographic monograph in the work of H.-A. Junod Patrick Harries	11
2	Making canes credible in colonial Mauritius William K. Storey	42
3	A commonwealth of science: the British Association in South Africa, 1905 and 1929 Saul Dubow	66
4	'For the public benefit': livestock statistics and expertise in the late nineteenth-century Cape Colony, 1850–1900 Dawn Nell	100
5	A mania for measurement: statistics and statecraft in the transition to apartheid Deborah Posel	116
6	Police dogs and state rationality in early twentieth-century South Africa Keith Shear	143
7	The Race Welfare Society: eugenics and birth control in Johannesburg, 1930–40 Susanne Klausen	164
8	Doctors and the state: George Gale and South Africa's experiment in social medicine Shula Marks	188
9	Technical development and the human factor: sciences of development in Rhodesia's Native Affairs Department Jocelyn Alexander	212

Index — 238