

Savage worlds

GERMAN ENCOUNTERS ABROAD,
1798–1914

Edited by Matthew P. Fitzpatrick and Peter Monteath

MANCHESTER
UNIVERSITY PRESS

CONTENTS

List of figures—page vii
Notes on contributors—viii

1	The savagery of empire Matthew P. Fitzpatrick and Peter Monteath	1
2	'No alternative to extermination': Germans and their 'savages' in southern Brazil at the turn of the nineteenth century Stefan Rinke	21
3	'Far better than their reputation': the Tolai of East New Britain in the writings of Otto Finsch Hilary Howes	42
4	The goddess and the beast: African–German encounters Eva Bischoff	63
5	Wine into wineskins: the Neuendettelsau missionaries' encounter with language and myth in New Guinea Daniel Midena	86
6	Signs of the savage in the skull? German investigations of Australian Aboriginal skeletal remains, c. 1860 Antje Kühnast	105
7	'Scientific tourism': colonialism in the photographs and letters of the young cosmopolitan Carl Heinrich Becker, 1900–2 Ulf Morgenstern	127
8	Through a German lens: the Australian Aborigines and the question of difference Judith Wilson	147
9	The savagery of America? Nineteenth-century German literature and indigenous representations Nicole Perry	169
10	Incompetent masters, indolent natives, savage origins: the Philippines and its inhabitants in the travel accounts of Carl Semper (1869) and Fedor Jagor (1873) Hidde van der Wall	185

CONTENTS

- 11 Social Democrats and Germany's war in South-West
Africa, 1904-7: the view of the socialist press 206
Andrew G. Bonnell

Select bibliography—230

Index—253