

NEW DIRECTIONS FOR TEACHING AND LEARNING

Marilla D. Svinicki, University of Texas, Austin
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

R. Eugene Rice, American Association for Higher Education
CONSULTING EDITOR

Evaluating Teaching in Higher Education: A Vision for the Future

Katherine E. Ryan
University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

EDITOR

Number 83, Fall 2000

JOSSEY-BASS
San Francisco

CONTENTS

EDITOR'S NOTES Katherine E. Ryan	1
A Tribute to Robert Menges Lawrence A. Braskamp	3
1. Shortcomings of Research on Evaluating and Improving Teaching in Higher Education Robert Menges Why do faculty fail to use what research shows about teaching, and what can researchers do about this dilemma?	5
2. Teaching Evaluation: Past, Present, and Future John C. Ory The purpose and methodology of evaluating teaching in higher education have changed significantly from the past.	13
3. Toward a More Holistic Approach to Assessing Faculty as Teachers Lawrence A. Braskamp Attempting to isolate the individual into simplistic qualities in an effort to assess them does more harm than good.	19
4. Technology, Evaluation, and the Visibility of Teaching and Learning Randall J. Bass The use of technology in higher education has an impact not just on learning but on teaching and its evaluation.	35
5. Situational Evaluation of Teaching on Campus Robert E. Stake, Edith J. Cisneros-Cohernour To provide a broader context for the evaluation of teaching, more inquiry-based methods of evaluation are considered.	51
6. An Examination of the Implementation of Peer Review of Teaching Daniel J. Bernstein, Jessica Jonson, Karen Smith This chapter describes the implementation of an experimental peer review process, its pros and cons, and suggestions to consider before implementing the method.	73

7. Evaluating the Teaching Portfolio: A Role for Colleagues John A. Centra Colleagues can contribute to the value of teaching portfolios and the role they play in summative evaluation.	87
8. Creating Responsive Student Ratings Systems to Improve Evaluation Practice Michael Theall, Jennifer Franklin Student ratings, the most researched type of teaching evaluation, continue to be controversial.	95
9. A Comprehensive Approach to the Evaluation of College Teaching Trav D. Johnson, Katherine E. Ryan This chapter summarizes what has gone before and offers a multi-faceted approach to the evaluation of teaching.	109
INDEX	125