

Rethinking Learner Support in Distance Education

Change and continuity in an international context

Edited by Alan Tait and Roger Mills

Contents

List of figures and tables	ix
List of contributors	x
Introduction	1
1 Constructivism or Confucianism? We have the technology, now what shall we do with it?	3
LOUISE AYLWARD
2 Exploring informal student study groups in a South African teacher education programme	14
CAROL BERTRAM
3 Supporting the masses? Learner perceptions of a South African ODL programme	28
NORMA CORRY AND TONY LELLIOTT
4 Addressing the learning skills needs of students at a distance: a dual medium approach	41
MARGARET JOHNSON AND CLIVE BARRETT
5 Supporting the student in new teaching and learning environments	55
BRIAN KENWORTHY
6 The importance of the tutor in open and distance learning	64
HELEN LENTELL
7 Remembering our common work: institutional support for open learning	77
ALAN MANDELL AND LEE HERMAN

8	On-line learning and supporting students: new possibilities	90
	ROBIN MASON
9	The centrality of learner support in open and distance learning: a paradigm shift in thinking	102
	ROGER MILLS
10	Distance higher education and library services in Japan	114
	CHIEKO MIZOUE
11	Changing entrenched learner support systems: vision and reality	123
	EVELYN PULANE NONYONGO
12	Lost and found: open learning outside the doors of academe	142
	JENNIFER O'ROURKE
13	Challenges in adjusting to new technology in supporting learners in developing countries	155
	JASON PENNELLS
14	Delivering learner support on-line: does the medium affect the message?	168
	MARION PHILLIPS
15	Rethinking learner support in the Open University UK: a case study	185
	ALAN TAIT
16	Collaborative on-line learning: transforming learner support and course design	198
	MARY THORPE
	Index	212